"The Norfolk Botanical Garden mission is to enrich life by promoting the enjoyment of plants and the environment through beautiful gardens and education programs," said Donna Krabill, the Garden's director of education and communications. "We along with our partners want to share our knowledge of horticulture and sound environmental practices with the public through this unique seminar. It only takes one person and literally one back yard to make a real difference."

Registration is $49 dollars and $85 for those receiving continuing education credits. Lunch is included with the registration fee. For more information and to download a printable flyer visit the Norfolk Botanical Garden website at www.norfolkbotanicalgarden.org. To register call 757-441-5830 extension 338.
